I JUMPED ABOARD THE TUG.

Then the board had swept by each other, and I turned to look at Mr. Yelnik. He was almost livid with rage, and he trembled as with a chill.

"You villain!" he said threateningly.
"So this is how you see each other. By heavens, I'll make you pay for this. I suppose you had arranged an elopement!" he exclaimed, getting more and more excited. And he didn't become calm when I told him his surmise was true.

There were few other passengers should have been and the estate are, in tact, already in tonage, but, being small to market, and any one who wishes to of Nebraska for 1500 acres of chicory.

It is a melancholy fact that Vailina, the historical Samoan home of the sifted writer, is to be sold. The house and for that reason did not make such as the market, and any one who wishes to of Nebraska for 1500 acres of chicory.

These things may be but the imaginative firelight talk of a superstitious people, but, sitting in a prosale Nineteenth century parior of the Occidental, away from the glamour of angangas and ghostly armies, her grandchild cooling its infantile prattle by her side, Mrs. Stevenson in all serlousness, tells of an occurrence which leads us to stop and think.

and think.

"It was only about six weeks ago," she remarked, "during the middle of the night. Everyone else about the house was asleep, when suddenly, without noise or footstep or sound of any kind, I was lifted violently from my bed and thrown across the room. Twice this was repeated, until, in my despair, I thought I had fallen into the hands of a midnight assassin. Fortunately, I took no harm, and then, when I had caimed down, I came to the conclusion that there had been a violent earththat there had been a violent earth-that there had been a violent equake."

"Was the house much damaged?"
"That is the curious feature of the whole affair. The doors were fastened, the locks were intact and no one had entered during the night. Burgiars were out of the question, and as to the earth-quake, nothing about the house was damaged—not even a piece of crockdamaged—not even a piece of crock-ery broken nor a picture thrown down, And no one else had been disturbed during the night."

It proved fulle to ask Mrs. Sievenson for an explanation of this strange oc-currence. The facts were there, and I could draw my own conclusions. So can the reader. But to come down to everyday topica. Mrs. Stevenson explained that her visit to California was due mainly to busi-ness reasons.

And on the boat, for the first time in three months. I met Mr. Yeinik He was feeling particularly amiable, probably because he had managed to 'freeze out' some business rival in one of his great schemes, and he approached me, saying, with a grim smile:

'How do you do, sir'

'Tim well,"

'Haven't seen you lately out at the house, 'he continued, sarcastically, 'No, and you're not likely to," I replied, with emphasia. How long this conversation might have continued 1 don't know, but at that moment we passed in midstream close by a ferry-boat steaming from Jersey City to New York, and one of the passengers on it, a girl we both knew, waved her hand to me and called out:
